

Clicquot Selections: January 2025

An Insignificant Case by Philip Margolin

A fun thriller about a third-rate lawyer who takes on the most important case of his life. There are so many twists and turns and he's often over his head, but its an amazing ride all the way through.

Husbands and Lovers by Beatriz Williams

Wonderful historical fiction with dual timelines that transport you to Egypt, Ireland and Newport RI. A story about heartache, redemption, and what it means to be family.

It's Elementary by Elise Bryant

Charming cozy mystery about an overwrought parent vs the PTA and school politics.

Pictures of You by Emma Grey

Poignant love story and second-chance romance of a woman who loses her husband in a car crash, and loses all memories from before. He rediscovery of love without the memory of her former lover.

Society of Lies by Lauren Ling Brown

Twisty, devious mystery/thriller of what really goes on in the secret societies of sororities and fraternities. I loved it.

The Blue Hour by Paula Hawkins

Thoughtful mystery that's closer to literary fiction than sleuth. Lots to think about, there were no characters with redeeming values.

The Co-Op by Tarah DeWitt

Fun romance with enemies to lovers at its heart. A fun read.

The Hollywood Assistant by May Cobb

An edge of your seat mystery told from the perspective of a Hollywood assistant where what they read isn't what they read... and it changes everything.

The Lake of Lost Girls by Katherine Greene

Suspenseful story of missing young women and the sister trying to get to the bottom of it all.

The Murderess by Laurie Notaro

Unbelievably true historical fiction of a sociopathic murderess in the 1930s.

What Does It Feel like by Sophie Kinsella

Poignant fiction about what you do each day after you realize your life is about to end.
Thoughtful and provocative.

A Song to Drown Rivers by Ann Liang

Beautiful historical fiction about the legend of Xishi, one of the four beauties of ancient China. She was a spy, a shrewd fighter, and well worth the legendary status attributed to her as told in this story.